Final scenes from the Philippines

■ Jim Kimball is a Salt Lake travel consultant who has been involved with the travel business for the past 15 years.

THE SCENES and sensations of my visits to the Philippines follow each other so thick and fast, my memory of them somewhat resembles a photo-montage. However, certain remembrances remain clear, and it is important that I attempt to chronicle a few of them before leaving.

MANILA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT:

As I wait in this airport for my flight home, I am impressed at what a curious thing it is how much of the human drama of this life and often the very fate of a people are played out in airports.

— I recall the newly-sworn-in Lyndon B. Johnson as he struggled through his first Presidential statement on the tarmac at Andrews Air Force Base during those dark days of November 1963.

— At a landing strip outside of London in 1938 Neville Chamberlain stepped from an aircraft with an umbrella in hand and declared to the world that a peace agreement had finally been reached with "Herr Hitler."

— In the years following World War II the incessant drone of aircraft engines saved a city from strangulation as the Berlin Airlift brought vital supplies to Templehoff.

— In a more fictionalized vein, it was the fog-shrouded Casablanca airport where Rick (Humphrey Bogart) told Ilsa (Ingrid Bergman) these immortal words:

"Ilsa, I'm no good at being noble, but it doesn't take much to see that the problems of three little people don't amount to a hill of beans in the crazy world. Someday you'll understand that. Not now. Here's looking at you, kid."

— And finally it was the crack of a pistol fired at the Manila International on August 21, 1983, that a martyr was born and the history of this Third World nation was dramatically changed. Benigno Aquino's assassination impacted this nation as few other events in its 20th century history. As one considers the events that followed, it is well to remember the line by T.S. Elliot, "I had not thought death had undone so many." The tragedy of this ended for most Filipinos an intolerable relationship with an isolated dictator and his power-hungry wife.

I had written in an earlier column that the Filipino disposition was to accept adversity with more stoicism than at times seemed good for them. I was wrong in this conclusion. I didn't fully appreciate the magnitude of their fighting spirit and their stubborn refusal to be further subjugated by a man and woman whose masks had finally fallen askew. In the end the Filipino people reconfirmed for all of us that democratic traditions are still very much alive in this world.

FILIPINO-AMERICAN RELATIONS:

In all my travels in the Philippines, I did not find any of the distain one often senses in other Asian countries between the natives and the former colonials. The American memory held by the Filipinos appears to be one of great affection. It interested me to know why this relationship succeeded where so many others in the Far East had failed.

In my conversations with the Filipino people I was able to understand a few of the factors that contributed to this affinity. I dare say the enigmatic General Douglas MacArthur played a significant role in this enduring alliance. The Filipinos grew to love him as they had his father. He was to the Filipinos the last glittering star in a major Hollywood epic that played successfully in the Philippines for over five decades.

The longer view of history, however, would suggest that the strong rapport between these two countries had more to do with what the American government accomplished in modernizing the Philippine's infrastructure — the educational system, the business community, the roads, the dams, the hospitals, the bridges — all become a reality for a grateful nation because of the American colonials.

THE PHILIPPINE FLORA:

My flight has been called, but before leaving I must finally record something of the stunning beauty of the islands of the Sulu Sea and the mountains surrounding Baguio. It is here that I was immediately engulfed by an overwhelming verdure — the greenest green I have ever seen.

It was a green of so many varying shades as to give an impression of a kaleidoscope of colors. There was the dark green of the large mango trees along the highways, the feathery green of the coconut palms, the light, almost yellow green of the new leaves of the tamarind trees. And there was the pale green of the rice seedlings which in a few more months would lend a touch of contrast with the gold of ripening grain.

It will remain a nourishing remembrance that just could carry me through many a drab winter of the American west.
